"Now, sir," said the busy man, looking up from his desk, "what do you wish? I am a man of few words."
"Glad to hear it," replied the visitor. "You will then be interested in adding to your vocabulary. I have here a dictionary which—"
At this juncture the patent bouncer was called into play.—Philadelphia Record.

An Impertinent Question.
"What became of that uncle of yours that you used to think so much of?"
"He's dead; died one day when he was all alone. Nobody knows just how it happened."
"Poor old man! How did he lose his money?"—Chicago Times-Herald.

Could Testify Otherwise.
"Lobsters," remarked the proprietor of the restaurant, "are scarce and high priced this year."
"They may be high priced," sighed the honest police captain, "but they're not scarce. My department is full of them."—Chicago Tribune.

Her Grievance.

"Henry!"
"Yes, love."
"I want you to go right down and chastise the editor of this paper. He not only makes fun of my speech before the suffrage convention, but he even has the audacity to criticize my costume!"—New York Journal.

Sure Enough Tale.
In one of the private schools here in town there is a small boy who is always cheerfully miles behind everybody else. He is not a dull boy, but learning does not appeal to him as besting a thing especially to be desired. Recently the teacher told the class a composition that on the next day she could expect each of them to be able to write a short anecdote. She explained with great care the meaning of the word anecdote, and next day when she called the class up to write all but the laggard went at once to work.

Why don't you write an anecdote, Rob?" asked the teacher.
"I forget what an anecdote is," said Rob, undisturbed.
"I explained to you yesterday, Rob, and you ought to remember," said the teacher, a bit out of patience. "An anecdote is a tale. Now write."
Rob bent over his slate and, with much twisting of brow and writhing of lip ground out his task. When the slates were collected, his was at the very top of the heap. The teacher picked it up, and this is what she read: "Yesterday we had soup made from the anecdote of an ox."—Youth's Companion.

The Shoe and the Woman.
Hereupon I ventured to reason with the woman.

"Your conventional immunities," I urged, "are not compatible with the new responsibilities which you seek to assume. That is where the shoe pinches."

"The woman gave me a withering look."
"Pinches!" she exclaimed most scornfully. "It's a mile too big! I could wear two sizes smaller!"
Oh, what a futile thing mere logic seemed now!—Detroit Journal
